Paper 12

Key messages

Candidates should take care to read each question carefully to ensure that they are giving the full answer as required. In questions involving trigonometric equations, particular care should be taken to identify whether an answer in radians or degrees is required. A question involving the use of calculus and trigonometry will always mean that radian measure is to be used.

Candidates should also ensure that they give their final answers, in the case of non-exact numerical answers, correct to 3 significant figures, or 1 decimal place in the case of angles in degrees, unless a different level of accuracy is specified in the question. Too many candidates do not take note of the rubric on the front page of the examination paper and thus lose accuracy marks needlessly. They should also be aware that working throughout a question should always be to a greater accuracy than that required in the final answer.

Candidates should be aware that if an answer is given in the first part of a multi-part question it is intended to help candidates make progress in subsequent parts and candidates should be advised to use the given result in the later parts.

General comments

Many candidates were able to make a good attempt at each of the questions and appeared to have no timing issues. However, it was very evident that many candidates had not prepared well for the examination, with papers showing no response to several questions. As there was no marked difference in the type of questions set in the past, it has to be assumed that these candidates had either not done enough revision or had not covered the syllabus objectives in great enough detail.

Comments on specific questions

Question 1

- (a) It was intended that candidates make use of the space below the initial introduction to the question to draw a Venn diagram to help with the following demands. Many candidates did just this but initial errors in completing the Venn diagram often led to errors in the subsequent parts. Most candidates were familiar with the n notation and gave integer answers.
- (b) (i) Many correct responses were seen, with candidates appreciating that Q was a subset of R .
- (ii) Too many candidates included the integer 30 in the universal set. This subsequently led to many incorrect answers of $\{30\}$ rather than the required empty set.

Answer: (a)(i) 10, (ii) 22, (iii) 4, (b)(i) \subset , (ii) \emptyset

Question 2

It was intended that candidates consider the terms of each of p , q and r separately and simplify them. Most candidates were able to do this and many candidates were successful in obtaining at least one correct answer.

Answer: $a = 1$, $b = -3$, $c = -1$
