U of M announces staff reductions

School says cuts to offset $50M loss

Laura Testino Memphis Commercial Appeal
USA TODAY NETWORK — TENNESSEE

The University of Memphis will begin staff reductions to offset a loss of $50 million due to the COVID-19 pandemic, President M. David Radd told faculty and staff in an email Wednesday.

The reductions will impact facilities management and support services along with the following auxiliary groups: housing, the Holiday Inn, parking and transportation services, Tiger Copy and Graphics, mail services, dining services, conference and event services and other "smaller units," Radd said.

Colleges, academics and research groups are not impacted by the reductions. Some administrative positions had already been consolidated and reorganized while some vacant administrative positions are also being eliminated.

"It is also important to note that we cannot raise tuition to offset these losses," Radd said. "We have made a strong commitment to containing costs given that the single greatest barrier to success our students face is financial."

The core leadership team, such as the President's Council members, are taking a 30% salary reduction through the end of the fiscal year. Radd is taking a 20% reduction through the end of the year to his base salary of $525,000.

Radd cited a decreased number of students on campus since last spring as a partial cause for the staffing cuts, as well as a lack of federal relief. U of M went remote in March and resumed this

"One of the most difficult things we had to face is being all virtual. And with that being said, we are always trying to figure out with the help of science and health professionals, how to transition students back in person. And we'll start with pre-K possibly through education resources.

Since Sept. 24, the district has said to expect COVID-19 metrics "in the coming days" that would govern when in-person learning might return. Those metrics could include data such as case numbers, positivity rates and transmission rates. As of Tuesday, Ray said there was no timeline for when those metrics would be released, but the dis-

Platform committed to raising student achievement

USA TODAY NETWORK — TENNESSEE

Education advocates including Gov. Bill Haslam are launching a new initiative in Tennessee to combat learning losses brought by the coronavirus pandemic, which tens of millions of students nationwide have been affected by remote learning and school closures.

The initiative, Better Student Outcomes Now, is a platform committed to raising student achievement in primary and secondary education in Tennessee, where education experts say nearly 1 million pre-K-12 students are struggling due to COVID-related challenges. "We are seeing our children and grandchildren fall further and further behind every day," said Sarah Carpenter, executive director of Memphis Lift, a nonprofit organization that joins nearly a dozen other education advocates in the statewide effort to raise awareness of strategies that help generate better results in schools.

The idea was to launch a broad communications initiative targeted at elected Tennessee officials, the media and others. "This may be revolutionary, what we're about to do," Carpenter told The Tennesseean on Tuesday. "We need to move like the house is on fire. There has never been more time to act."
