ADHD and Anxiety: Causality Sequences Through a Biopsychosocial Model Hongbao Cao, Shaolei Teng, Sha Liu, 2025-08-18 ADHD Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder and anxiety disorders are two of the most common psychiatric conditions often co existing in the same individuals The relationship between these disorders is complex and multifactorial in nature The biopsychosocial model postulates that biological psychological and social factors all play a significant role in human functioning in the context of disease or illness which includes these disorders Evidence suggests that ADHD can predispose individuals to anxiety and vice versa However the causality sequences as explored in the literature remains limited It is possible that ADHD symptomology causes anxiety or the genetics behind ADHD causes anxiety symptoms Current research has adopted a more complex nuanced understanding of both disorders acknowledging the unique interactions of biological psychological and social factors and large datasets e g Dunedin datasets may help with developing a stronger causality sequence It is also noteworthy that severe anxiety can look like ADHD but the treatment is totally different as ADHD meds Stimulants can make anxiety worse

The SAGE Handbook of Developmental Disorders Patricia Howlin, Tony Charman, Mohammad Ghaziuddin, 2011-01-31 Over the last four decades breakthroughs in genetic knowledge together with the emergence of disciplines devoted to the scientific study of developmental disorders have resulted in much greater awareness of the many different behavioural and genetic phenotypes involved It is now evident that not only do different disorders have different causes and different manifestations but different neurological and biochemical bases different responses to intervention and different life courses Reflecting the enormous changes that have taken place in our knowledge and understanding of developmental disorders this groundbreaking international volume brings this vast and complex field together for the first time The Editors have collected together the world's leading academic scholars and clinicians to explore how current research across a range of different disciplines can inform clinical practice and help to improve the lives of individuals and their families

Emotion-based Decision-making in Children with Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders, 2011 Neurobehavioral outcomes associated with prenatal alcohol exposure range from severe intellectual deficiency to subtle attention and motor deficits Diagnosis of individuals with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders FASD can be challenging especially when physical markers are absent or prenatal histories are unavailable In addition due to neurobehavioral similarities individuals with FASD and those with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder ADHD can be confused clinically making differential diagnosis difficult Research has recommended that identification of FASD be based on a neurobehavioral profile However some neurocognitive domains including decision making have received little attention Emotion based decision making involves strategic adaptation of behavior based on uncertain information and is essential for everyday function Deficits in decision making in individuals with FASD are suggested by neuroanatomical abnormalities and difficulty with everyday function The Iowa Gambling Task IGT is a widely used measure of decision making simulating unpredictable reward and loss contingencies of complex decision making The IGT which has not been used in alcohol exposed populations was administered to children with FASD n 21 ADHD n 22 and typically developing controls n 21 Further because working memory the process of temporarily storing and manipulating information may be related to decision making a measure of working memory was included in the test battery A mixed model ANOVA demonstrated that children with FASD chose significantly fewer advantageous cards than control children In contrast children with ADHD were distinguished from controls based on processing frequency of rewards losses on the IGT Group decision making performance was not accounted for by working memory performance in either the FASD or ADHD group Collectively these results suggest that children with FASD and ADHD have aberrant decision making processes although their dysfunction may be due to distinguishable mechanisms While children with FASD were deficient in making decisions based on learning from exposure to past contingencies children with ADHD differed from controls in their ability to tolerate unpredictable reinforcement schedules Decision making was found to be independent of intellectual function and other high order cognitive abilities including working memory and therefore should be a consideration in further research and clinical assessment of children with FASD and ADHD
