interprets the shifts in his ontology by reconsidering the ancient problematic of human institution nomos and nature physis on the one hand and the question of being and creation on the other. Unlike the order of physis, the order of nomos has played no substantial role in the development of Western thought. The first part of the book suggests that Castoriadis sought to remedy this by elucidating the social historical as the region of being that eludes the determinist imaginary of inherited philosophy. This ontological turn was announced in his 1975 magnum opus The Imaginary Institution of Society. With the aid of archival sources, the second half of the book reconstructs a second ontological shift in Castoriadis's thought that occurred during the 1980s. The author argues that Castoriadis extends his notion of ontological creation beyond the human realm and into nature. This move has implications for his overall ontology and signals a shift toward a general ontology of creative physis. FDA By-lines, 1982-04 Parliamentary Papers Great Britain. Parliament. Examinations where the focus is on pedagogy. Archaeology Behind the Battle Lines Andrew Shapland, Evangelia Stefani, 2017-07-20. This volume focuses on a formative period in the history and archaeology of northern Greece. The decade following 1912, when Thessaloniki became part of Greece, was a period marked by an extraordinary internationalism as a result of the population movements caused by the shifting of national borders and the troop movements which accompanied the First World War. The papers collected here look primarily at the impact of the discoveries of the Army of the Orient on the archaeological study of the region of Macedonia. Resulting collections of antiquities are now held in Thessaloniki, London, Paris, Edinburgh, and Oxford. Various specialists examine each of these collections, bringing the archaeological legacy of the Macedonian Campaign together in one volume for the first time. A key theme of the volume is the emerging dialogue between the archaeological remains of Macedonia and the politics of Hellenism. A number of authors consider how archaeological interpretation was shaped by the incorporation of Macedonia into Greece. Other authors describe how the politics of the Campaign, in which Greece was initially a neutral partner, had implications both for the administration of archaeological finds and their subsequent dispersal. A particular focus is the historical personalities who were involved and the sites they discovered The role of the Greek Archaeological Service particularly in the protection of antiquities as well as promoting excavation in the aftermath of the 1917 Great Fire of Thessaloniki is also considered Documents International Civil Aviation Organization,1975 Parliamentary Debates (Hansard). Incorporating Science, Economics, and Sociology in Developing Sanitary and Phytosanitary Standards in International Trade National Research Council,Board on Agriculture and Natural Resources,2000-07-01 The rapid expansion of international trade has brought to the fore issues of conflicting national regulations in the area of plant animal and human health These problems include the concern that regulations designed to protect health can also be used for protection of domestic producers against international competition At a time when progressive tariff reform has opened up markets and facilitated trade in part responding to consumer demands for access to a wide choice of products and services at reasonable prices closer scrutiny of regulatory measures has become increasingly important At the same time there are clear differences among countries and cultures as to the types of risk citizens are willing to accept The activities of this conference were based on the premise that risk analyses i e risk assessment management and communication are not exclusively the domain of the biological and natural sciences the social sciences play a prominent role in describing how people in different contexts perceive and respond to risks Any effort to manage sanitary and phytosanitary SPS issues in international trade must integrate all the sciences to develop practices for risk assessment management and communication that recognize international diversity in culture experience and institutions Uniform international standards can help but no such norms are likely to be acceptable to all countries Political and administrative structures also differ causing differences in approaches and outcomes even when basic aims are compatible Clearly there is considerable room for confusion and mistrust The issue is how to balance the individual regulatory needs and approaches of countries with the goal of promoting freer trade This issue arises not only for SPS standards but also in regard to regulations that affect other areas such as environmental quality working conditions and the exercise of intellectual property rights This conference focused on these issues in the specific area of SPS measures This area includes provisions to protect plant and animal health and life and more generally the environment and regulations that protect humans from foodborne risks The Society for Risk Analysis defines a risk as the potential for realization of unwanted adverse consequences to human life health property or the environment estimation of risk is usually based on the expected value of the conditional probability of the event occurring times the consequence of the event given that it has occurred The task of this conference and of this report was to elucidate the place of science culture politics and economics in the design and implementation of SPS measures and in their international management The goal was to explore the critical roles and the limitations of the biological and natural sciences and the social sciences such as economics sociology anthropology philosophy and political science in the management of SPS issues and in judging whether particular SPS measures create unacceptable barriers to international trade The conference s objective also was to consider the elements that would compose a multidisciplinary analytical framework for SPS decision making and needs for future research

The uestion of whether an infant s diet represents a health hazard is not new A health risk to infants from the intake of heavy metals via bottled food cannot be excluded at the present time It is the purpose of this symposium to increase our knowledge of these disquieting facts If 70% of all environmental chemicals including the ubiquitous heavy metals enter the human body through food to what extent are infants affected Generally speaking the effect on children has thus far been excluded from all the discussions concerning safety margins or limits on heavy metal intake Furthermore this age group has also been largely excluded from studies determining the acceptable daily intake values for other substances Paradoxically enough such studies often contain a comment to the effect that children are particularly sensitive to these substances The lack of consideration is certainly also due to the fact that little attention has been paid to this age group in toxicological research The ZEBS study Heavy Metals in the Infant Diet by Kaferstein and Muller points to a mechanism which may increase the contamination of infant diet namely the water used to prepare infant formula Such facts as well as models for risk characterization have been presented by Muller and Schmidt in these proceedings Yet many questions remain
